~~From Paracelsus to Newton: Magic and the Making of Modern...~~

The alchemist and physician known as Paracelsus (1493–1541) appears to have dwelt in a completely different intellectual world from Sir Isaac Newton (1642–1727).

Newton's work lies in the lofty era of the Enlightenment and the modern world, while that of the enigmatic Paracelsus conjures up the superstitious lore of the Dark Ages. The rise of science and the decline of magic unfolded over ...

Webster identifies three types of premodern thought that the mechanists had a hard time shaking: prophecy, natural magic and demonic magic. Paracelsus attempted to predict harvest failures, civil wars and whatnot from comets. Leading lights of the Royal Society, 150 years later, were beginning to find an ordinary explanation for comets, but they were still assiduously attempting to
