Kgalagadi Transfrontier Park was proclaimed in 1931 mainly to protect migratory game, especially the gemsbok. Although the Botswana-South Africa border bisects the park, there is no boundary fence and the wild animals have complete freedom of movement in a well-balanced ecological area. Together with the adjacent Gemsbok National Park in Botswana, this park comprises an area of over 3.6 million hectares - one of the very few conservation areas of this magnitude left in the world.
