The Mamlūk sultans introduced a new feature on the coinage: they engraved their coats of arms on their coins, mostly on the copper fulūs, but sometimes also on the gold and silver. Representations of animals, plants or inanimate objects already occur on many copper coins of the Umayyad caliphs; these latter are, however, purely ornamental and have no heraldic meaning.

Like all Mamluk copper coins, this one struck in Aleppo was intended purely for local use. The Mamluks frequently placed ornaments, arabesques, scrolls or flowerets among the legends of their coins. They also introduced a new feature on the coinage, particularly the copper fulus, which have been described as heraldry but are actually emblems, or blazons, representing the rulers.
