Scotland And The Union 1707

Although described as a Union of Crowns, and King James' acknowledgement of his accession to a single Crown, England and Scotland were officially separate Kingdoms until 1707 (as opposed to the implied creation of a single unified Kingdom, exemplified by the later Kingdom of Great Britain). Prior to the Acts of Union there had been three previous attempts (in 1606, 1667, and 1689) to unite the two countries by Acts of Parliament, but it was not until the early 18th century that both ...

In a poorly attended Scottish Parliament the MPs voted to agree the Union and on 16 January 1707 the Act of Union was signed. The Act came into effect on May 1st 1707; the Scottish Parliament and the English Parliament united to form the Parliament of Great Britain, based in the Palace of Westminster, London, the home of the English Parliament.

The Act of Union between England and Scotland

The Union that took place in 1707 was an incorporating Union, wherein the Scottish and English Parliaments ceased to exist, and were replaced by the new Parliament of Great Britain.

The Union of 1707: the Historical Context

SOMEONE ONCE described the 1707 parliamentary Union of Scotland and England as suggestive of the Union that joins an apple with a small boy. Still, it has lasted for three centuries: 300 years of a Union that witnessed industrial revolution, commercial and military supremacy on a global scale, and the rise and giveaway (or takeaway) of the British Empire.
